code meaning

If it appears to the comptroller that an invention for which a patent has been granted formed part, of the state of the art by virtue only that it, comprised matter contained in an application which was published on or after the priority date of the invention, he may on his own initiative by order revoke the patent. However he shall not do so without giving the proprietor of the patent an opportunity of making any observations and of amending the specification of the patent so as to exclude any matter which formed part of the state of the art. Where the comptroller considers that the patent ought to be revoked, the proprietor is notified and given an opportunity, within three months of the notification, of making observations and of amending the specification of the patent.
