code meaning

Any person may apply to the comptroller or the Court for the revocation of a patent on any one of the following grounds: the invention was not a patentable invention; the patent was granted to a person or persons who were not the only ones entitled to be granted the patent; the specification of the patent is unclear; the matter disclosed in the specification extends beyond that disclosed in the application as filed; the protection conferred by the patent has been extended by an amendment which should not have been allowed. The applicant must provide a statement which sets out fully the grounds of revocation relied upon, the facts relied upon and the relief sought. If the proprietor wishes to contest the application, he must within three months file a counterstatement. If at any time the formal requirements have not been met, the application is considered not to have been properly launched and this is advertised in the Official Gazette.
