code meaning

Any person may apply to the comptroller or the Court for the revocation of a patent on any the following grounds; the invention was not a patentable invention; the patent was granted to a person or persons who were not the only ones entitled to be granted the patent; the specification of the patent is unclear; the matter disclosed in the specification extends beyond that disclosed in the application as filed; the protection conferred by the patent has been extended by an amendment which should not have been allowed. The applicant must provide a statement which sets out fully the grounds of revocation relied upon, the facts relied upon and the relief sought. If the proprietor wishes to contest the application he must file a counterstatement within three months. The action is heard by the comptroller or the Court. If the application is not proceeded with, this is advertised in the Official Gazette.
